CENTRALIZING INVENTORY: STREAMLINING COSTS

Jacksonville, FL – March 2004: A global leader in pallet and container pooling services approached Amware Logistics Services of Jacksonville, FL. The company had an overriding goal: to reduce the surmounting logistics cost tied up in raw-materials/component parts that are used in pallet and container manufacturing.

With services touching almost every major and many minor industrial market, this customer's component parts are distributed to the many pooling, repair, and maintenance facilities throughout the Southeast and Midwestern United States. A few pennies spent on raw material logistics become lots of pennies very quickly. The right solution became quickly evident: the customer needed to consolidate inventories and receipt locations to get a handle on soaring logistics costs.

Leveraging an already existing operational relationship with Amware, the company was able to import its component parts directly into the Port of Jacksonville. Since Amware maintains a strong relationship with the port, it was possible to unload the containerized components onto chassis and deliver them seamlessly to Amware's Jacksonville facility. Currently Amware manages some 100 containers per month of component parts for this leader.

Amware's customer now enjoys centralized inventories and distribution for its Southeast and Midwest markets. In doing so, it has reduced and streamlined its costs that until now were being passed down the line to its customers...savings that its clients are realizing in their invoices!
